

The Nest

from the series

Entanglement, 2013

Michael J.P. Hall

The Nest portrays our entangled relationship with single-use plastics. The familiar image of a young family huddled together is transformed when set in an environment of plastic waste. The collision between the vulnerability of the characters and the harshness of their living conditions seeks to bring awareness to our own relationship with the consumption of non-sustainable materials.

Our choices of what and how we consume create the world we live in. Which choices lead us towards the world of The Nest, and which choices steer us away from it?
